Adam is an Obstetrician and Gynaecologist in private and public practice. He is committed to providing the best possible care and believes that in order to do so each woman must be treated as an individual. To achieve this Adam draws on his ability to listen to a woman's expectations and communicate with her the best options based on his extensive evidence based knowledge and experience.

Adam graduated from the University of Sydney's Graduate Medical Program and completed his Obstetrics and Gynaecology training at Royal Prince Alfred Hospital where he was the both the Senior Registrar and Pelvic Surgery Fellow. During his training Adam also completed a MBA in Health Management focusing on improving the delivery of high quality evidence based healthcare for women. After finishing his training in Australia, Adam took his passion for obstetrics to Europe working at the world-renowned National Maternity Hospital in Dublin as their Labour Ward Research Fellow.
