Dr Sean Williams is an orthopaedic specialist hip surgeon with a special interest in hip preservation and hip replacement surgery.

Sean places great importance on taking time to understand each patient's specific diagnosis and functional goals in order to create a personalised treatment plan, tailored to each patient's expectations. He prides himself on excellent and friendly communication with his patients, their families and their healthcare team, including GPs and physiotherapists, to ensure that the diagnosis and treatment plan is clear to all involved.

Sean understands that in many cases, surgery isn't the first or the best answer, and works closely with patients' rehabilitation providers to ensure an optimal recovery, with or without surgery.

He is an Australian-trained orthopaedic surgeon, who undertook 5 years of extensive surgical training in regional and metropolitan NSW. This included training under local experts across many of Sydney's most well regarded hospitals including Royal North Shore, St Vincents, Royal Prince Alfred and Westmead Children's Hospitals as well as regional centres such as Canberra, Tweed Heads and Dubbo.

After qualification as an orthopaedic surgeon with the Royal Australasian College of Surgeons, he moved to Perth, Western Australia, to seek out further sub-specialist training with high-volume hip preservation and arthroplasty surgeons, with the goal of being able to provide his patients with a wider array of modern treatment techniques.

Having trained in the management of both adult and paediatric hip conditions, Sean enjoys accepting referrals for patients of all ages.
